

Craft beer pub heads for Nashville Farmers' Market

Sep 26, 2014, 11:42am CDT

Eric Snyder

Managing Editor- Nashville Business Journal

Email | LinkedIn | Google+ | Twitter

In addition to artisan foods and fresh produce, you'll soon be able to pick up some craft beer at the Nashville Farmers' Market.

According to a news release, The Picnic Tap will open Oct. 2.

The Picnic Tap, owned by Eric Woodard, will offer craft beer, growler fill-ups for take-home and a locally sourced charcuterie menu.

"As a long time home brewer and fan of craft beer, I've always loved places that showcase the beers of a particular city or region. I've thought about opening a place like The Picnic Tap for several years now — a very casual place where you can hang out, relax and enjoy a local hand-crafted beer with friends," Woodard said in the news release.

"When we moved to Nashville in 2013 from Houston, Texas, I was really happy to discover Nashville's thriving microbrewery scene — with so many craft breweries right here in the city and surrounding areas producing dozens of high quality craft beers. We visited the Nashville Farmers' Market and I realized only one thing was missing — a genuine focus on locally and regionally-produced beers! The casual atmosphere and open space at NFM couldn't be a better fit for The Picnic Tap."

Want Nashville news in your inbox? Click here to sign up for our email newsletters